These information on the Thai Labour Campaign (TLC) are taken from their website January 18, 2006.

Thai Labour Campaign is a non-profit, non-governmental organization committed to promoting workers' rights in Thailand and increasing awareness of labour issues globally. TLC was started in February of 2000 and is headquartered in Bangkok, Thailand.

TLC's goals:

- Bring Thai workers into solidarity with international workers
- Help workers to win living wages and improved labour rights
- Pressure the government for meaningful labour protection standards and enforcement of those standards

Our Role in the Thai Labour Movement

- To research and collect information about all forms of labour violations in Thailand.
- To publicize unjust practices and labour abuses to TLC's network of organizations at the national and international levels.
- To provide documentation and information on Thai labour laws, international labour standards and related laws and practices such as codes of conduct.
- To serve as a forum for discussion and education on labour conditions, labour laws, codes of conduct and labour standards.
- To call for action and campaigning on labour issues in Thailand.
- To campaign against manufacturers and transnational corporations which violates workers' rights.
